Meets with Young Men's Christian Association Directors During the Afternoon.

"I have been so busy since I was ape pointed to the cabinet that I have not shad time to ask the president why he appointed me." declared William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, before the largest crowd that has ever gathered at the Commercial club. It was one of many remarks in his speech, which were received by the audience with much laughter and applause. In fact, his speech contained lines of humor and good will all the way through. Joseph Millard, former United states senator from Nebraska, acted as chairman and in tintroducing the speaker, complimented the president on his choice of Mr. Bryan to head the cabinet. Other sentences in his introductory remarks afforded thoughts as which the secretary of state humorously elaborated. Mr. Bryan said the club had done him honor by making Senator Millard the toastmaster-"Senstor Millard, who has not always, voted the same and who is one of those in the opposite party broad enough, liberal enough and generous nough to let his interest run across party lines occasionally." Close to Being President. "As the toastmaster has suggested," he continued, "the president probably selected me because of all the people in the ountry I had come most requestly close to becoming president." In explaining some of the duties of the secretary of state the chairman had said the president made no mistake in aopointing Mr. Bryan because Mr. Bryan knows the troubles of public life and "will know better in a year from now, especially after handling the many gens tlemen who want to be sent abroad. "I don't suppose," declared Mr. Bryan, rather as a reply to this, "that there is any man in the country who knows more people who ought to be sent to foreign lands. It is my regret that 12,500 miles away is the greatest distance they can be sent. This globe is too small for sending some of the people to distances would like to send them. But if the president will give me a free hand I'll send as many republicans abroad as I can before the next election." Mr. Bryan dealt at some length on the policies of the present administration in relations with foreign countries, and in words evidently calculated to make his audience believe the administration with adopt more a policy of friendship and example for other nations than endeavors to transcend them. Epoch-Making Decision.

"I shall enjoy making just as cordial relations between our country and the other nations as possible," said he. "The president could not have found one more in sympathy with his specific intentions in regard to relations with foreign countries than I.
